Finally, Ho Chi Minh City (South) is entering its prime dry season, delivering the best conditions with consistently warm, sunny, and dry weather, where daily temperatures typically range from a low of 23°C.

Thailand

November in Thailand marks the beginning of the highly sought-after cool and dry season for much of the country, but the weather differs dramatically between Bangkok and Ko Samui; in Bangkok, you can expect near-ideal conditions as the main rainy season ends, with high temperatures averaging around 32°C and comfortable lows near 23°C, accompanied by significantly lower humidity and minimal rainfall, making it perfect for city exploration. Conversely, Ko Samui (and the Gulf Coast islands) is in the middle of its own separate, secondary wet season during November, making it statistically the island's rainiest month, with average highs around 29°C and lows near 24°C but with a high chance of heavy, sometimes prolonged rainfall and rougher seas.

Singapore

Singapore's climate in November is characterised by its perpetually hot, humid, and rainy equatorial weather, as this month marks the beginning of the pre-Northeast Monsoon season and is typically one of the wettest periods of the year. You can expect very little temperature variation, with average high temperatures near 30°C and warm overnight lows around 24°C, combined with high humidity that makes it feel even warmer. The rainfall is heavy and frequent, though it usually comes in the form of short, intense tropical downpours or thunderstorms, often occurring in the late afternoon or early evening, which means outdoor activities are best planned for the mornings.
