CLIMATE & AVERAGE TEMPERATURES

Japan

Across Japan, July and August are the peak of summer, characterised by heat and humidity levels that often make temperatures feel several degrees warmer than recorded. In central and southern cities like Tokyo, Kagoshima, Sasebo, and Sakaiminato, daytime highs regularly range between 30°C and 35°C, with high humidity (often above 75%) and the occasional sudden "guerrilla" rainstorm or typhoon. As you move north to the Tohoku

Important Information

and Hokkaido regions, the heat becomes slightly more manageable but remains warm: Sendai, Miyako, and Aomori typically see highs between 26°C and 29°C, while Hakodate in Hokkaido is the mildest of your list, with pleasant averages around 23°C to 25°C. While the northern ports provide a brief respite from the sweltering tropical air of the south, you should expect sunny, muggy conditions and very strong UV rays across all these locations during this mid-summer window.

Busan, South Korea

Busan in July and August mirrors the intensity of southern Japan, with the added influence of the Jangma (monsoon season) often peaking in July. You can expect daytime highs to average around 29°C to 30°C, though with humidity levels frequently hitting 80-90%, the "feels like" temperature regularly climbs to 35°C or higher. August is technically the hottest month and the best for swimming at Haeundae Beach, with sea temperatures reaching a warm 26°C, but it also carries a higher risk of typhoons. Nights offer little relief, remaining "tropical" with lows seldom dropping below 24°C.
