Other Important Information

CLIMATE & AVERAGE TEMPERATURES

Important Information

Norfolk Island

April on Norfolk Island offers a pleasant, mild transition into autumn, with daytime temperatures averaging a comfortable 22°C and dipping to a soft 18°C at night. While the sea remains warm enough for swimming at 23°C, this month does see an increase in precipitation as the island enters its wetter season. Despite the occasional showers and high humidity levels—typically between 71% and 79%—the island still enjoys about 7 hours of daily sunshine, making it a great time for outdoor exploration as long as you keep a light raincoat handy.

New Caledonia

Compared to Norfolk Island, Noumea offers a more tropical experience in April, with daytime highs reaching a balmy 27°C and nighttime temperatures staying around 21°C. The water is significantly warmer here at 26°C, perfect for snorkelling the world's second-largest barrier reef. While it is slightly less rainy than Norfolk Island, the humidity remains high at 78%. You'll still get a solid 7 hours of sunshine a day, but the "Very High" UV index of 9 means you'll need to be much more diligent with sun protection than you would further south.

Mystery Island, Vanuatu

Mystery Island is significantly warmer and more humid than both Norfolk Island and Noumea in April. With daytime highs of 29°C and a constant sea temperature of 28°C, it feels like a true tropical summer. However, it is also the wettest of the three destinations. While the humidity is quite high at 83%, the frequent late-afternoon tropical downpours help cool the air, and you'll still enjoy plenty of clear skies with 7 hours of sun per day.

Fiji

In April, Suva and Savusavu are deeply tropical, with daytime temperatures hovering around 30°C and nighttime lows staying a balmy 23°C to 24°C. Both locations are quite wet during this time, as April marks the tail end of Fiji's wet season; often delivered in short, intense tropical bursts followed by steam and sunshine. With humidity levels pushing 84% and sea temperatures at a near-perfect 28°C, the air can feel quite heavy and hot, though the frequent rain provides a lush, vibrant green backdrop to the islands.

Samoa

Apia is very similar in climate to the Fijian locations, characterized by high heat and significant humidity in April. Daytime temperatures consistently hit 30°C, and the ocean stays a balmy 29°C, which is warmer than both Norfolk Island and Noumea. While it receives a substantial amount of rain, this usually falls over about 12 days, often in heavy but brief tropical showers. With 7 hours of daily sunshine and humidity levels around 79%, it offers a classic tropical environment that is lush and warm, though travelers should be prepared for the "oppressive" heat common during this transition month.

Hawaii

In May, Honolulu and Kona both average daytime highs of 28°C and nighttime lows around 21°C to 22°C, making for very consistent, pleasantly warm weather. Honolulu tends to be windier due to its exposure to the northeast trade winds, while Kona—shielded by the massive Mauna Loa and Mauna Kea volcanoes—is generally calmer with flatter seas. With the ocean at 26°C and very high UV levels, it's a premier month for beach activities across both islands.

New York

In May, New York City enters a vibrant and mild spring phase, with average daytime highs reaching a pleasant 21°C to 22°C. While the days are increasingly warm, especially toward the end of the month, the evenings remain quite cool, typically dropping to around 12°C, so layering is essential for any late-night city walks. This month is relatively wet, seeing rain spread across 12 to 15 days, though these are often passing spring showers rather than constant downpours. Humidity levels are generally comfortable, hovering around 63%, and the city enjoys about 8 to 9 hours of sunshine daily; however, beachgoers should note that the Atlantic remains very cold, with sea temperatures averaging only 12°C.
