35-DAY CRUISE PACKAGE | ANTARCTICA & CHILEAN PATAGONIA CRUISE

The Itinerary

The bay is often filled with drifting sea ice and icebergs, creating a striking polar landscape, and it serves as an important area for scientific research, particularly in studying climate patterns, marine ecosystems, and glacial movement in Antarctica.

Jenny Island is a rocky, 500-metre-high island situated within northern Marguerite Bay, east of Adelaide Island. It was discovered and named during early 20th-century expeditions, likely in connection with the explorations led by Jean-Baptiste Charcot. The island is surrounded by icy waters and drifting sea ice, making it a remote and rarely visited location. Like much of Antarctica, it plays a role in scientific research, offering insights into polar climates, glaciology, and the region's fragile ecosystem.

Bongrain Point is a narrow, rocky headland forming part of the rugged coastline along the Antarctic Peninsula, near Marguerite Bay. It was charted during early French expeditions led by Jean-Baptiste Charcot and named after a member of his team. Surrounded by icy seas and often battered by harsh polar weather, Bongrain Point is a remote and seldom-visited feature, contributing to scientific understanding of Antarctica's coastal geography and glacial environment.

Please note: All maritime schedules and Zodiac landings remain subject to prevailing polar weather and ice conditions.

Swan Hellenic's SH Vega

Meals included: Breakfast; Lunch; Dinner

Day 9 Marguerite Bay, Stonington Island, Neny Island, Antarctica

Neny Island is a small, rocky island located in Marguerite Bay off the western coast of the Antarctic Peninsula. It lies close to the historic British research base known as Stonington Island and was explored during early Antarctic expeditions.

Despite its harsh, icy surroundings, Neny Island is notable for supporting some limited wildlife, including seabirds, and has been used in scientific studies focused on the region's environment and climate.

Swan Hellenic's SH Vega

Meals included: Breakfast; Lunch; Dinner

Day 10 Marguerite Bay, Horseshoe Island, Antarctica

Horseshoe Island is a small, horseshoe-shaped island in Marguerite Bay along the western coast of the Antarctic Peninsula. It is best known for hosting an abandoned British research station, known as Base Y, established in the mid-20th century for scientific and surveying work.

Surrounded by glaciers, sea ice, and rugged terrain, the island offers a striking example of Antarctica's remote environment and has become an important historic site reflecting early polar exploration and research efforts.

Swan Hellenic's SH Vega

Meals included: Breakfast; Lunch; Dinner

35-DAY CRUISE PACKAGE | ANTARCTICA & CHILEAN PATAGONIA CRUISE

The Itinerary

Day 11 Prospect Point, Fish Island, Antarctica

Prospect Island is a small, rocky island situated within Marguerite Bay near the Antarctic Peninsula. It lies in a region characterized by icy waters, drifting icebergs, and nearby glaciers, making it part of a dynamic polar landscape. Though rarely visited, it contributes to scientific observations of coastal geography and changing ice conditions in Antarctica.

Fish Islands are a scattered group of small islands and rocks located off the coast of the Antarctic Peninsula, also within Marguerite Bay. Despite their remote and harsh setting, they are notable for supporting colonies of seabirds and marine life.

These islands are often used for ecological and environmental studies, helping researchers better understand Antarctic ecosystems and the impacts of climate change.

Swan Hellenic's SH Vega

Meals included: Breakfast; Lunch; Dinner

Day 12 Petermann Island, Cruising Lemaire Channel, Port Charcot, Antarctica

Petermann Island is a small, low-lying island off the western coast of the Antarctic Peninsula, known for its rich wildlife, including colonies of Adelie penguins, gentoo penguins, and seabirds. It was explored during early expeditions led by Jean-Baptiste Charcot and remains a popular stop for scientific visits and expedition cruises due to its accessible terrain and vibrant ecosystem.

Cruising through the Lemaire Channel is one of the most spectacular experiences in Antarctica, as the narrow passage is flanked by towering, snow-covered mountains and steep cliffs that plunge directly into icy waters. Often called "Kodak Gap" for its breathtaking scenery, the channel frequently fills with floating icebergs, offering dramatic views and close encounters with seals, penguins, and whales in a pristine polar setting.

Port Charcot is a small, sheltered harbor located on Booth Island along the western side of the Antarctic Peninsula. It was named after French explorer Jean-Baptiste Charcot, who used the site as a winter anchorage during his early 20th-century expedition. Surrounded by steep, icy terrain and dramatic coastal scenery, Port Charcot remains a historically significant location and is occasionally visited by research teams and expedition cruises exploring the region.

Swan Hellenic's SH Vega

Meals included: Breakfast; Lunch; Dinner

Day 13 Cierva Cove, Mikkelsen Harbour, Antarctica

Cierva Cove is a scenic inlet along the western coast of the Antarctic Peninsula, known for its active glaciers and frequent calving of ice into the sea. The area is rich in wildlife, including seals, seabirds, and penguins, making it an important site for ecological and glaciological research in Antarctica's rapidly changing environment.

Mikkelsen Harbour is a sheltered anchorage located among the islands off the Antarctic Peninsula, near Trinity Island. Surrounded by rugged, ice-covered landscapes, it provides relatively calm waters that have made it a useful stop for ships and expeditions. The harbour is also notable for its wildlife and quiet natural beauty, offering insight into the region's marine ecosystems and polar conditions.

The bay's abandoned whaling stations and shipwrecks offer a unique glimpse into early 20th-century Antarctic industry, while the surrounding volcanic landscape provides important geological and ecological insights.

Elephant Point is located on Elephant Island in the South Shetland Islands. It is a rugged, ice-covered headland that serves as a habitat for seals, penguins and seabirds. PACKING LIST GUIDE:

As Antarctica is one of the most remote, rarely visited, parts of the world, knowing what to pack for your voyage isn't always easy. So, in case you're unsure what clothes to pack for a cruise to Antarctica, below is a simple cruise outfit planner.

PLAN AHEAD:

It's best to pack thoughtfully for Antarctica's climate. Unless you travel there frequently, there's no reason you'd know what clothes to bring on a cruise to Antarctica. Everyone experiences the cold (and warmth) differently, but it pays to bear in mind daily temperatures in the Antarctic Peninsula can range from well below freezing to the upper 40°F/4°C. Plus, windchill can make things feel much colder, especially as you'll be spending a lot of your time outdoors in places that are subject to strong winds.

STAY WARM:

When you're thinking about what clothes to take on a cruise, it's worth remembering that the outside temperature in Antarctica can feel much colder than the reading on a thermometer. So it's recommended you wrap up extra warm. Layering is a great way to do this. Wearing several lightweight, loose-fitting layers is better than opting for one heavier layer. This is because the different layers allow for pockets of air between each item of clothing, which provides extra insulation, and it means you can remove or add layers when your body temperature changes.

CHOOSING CLOTHES:

A lot of the action on an expedition cruise happens outside, so dress codes are very relaxed on these voyages. Pack clothes that are comfortable and easy to wash. And it pays to consider how you're going to pack everything. For instance, do you know how to pack a cocktail dress in a suitcase? Is a cocktail dress something you'll definitely need? Some guests find it helpful to choose their clothes, then go back and edit their choices after an hour or so.

WHAT TO PACK:

For the polar regions you'll need casual trousers, jeans, long-sleeved t-shirts and a thin jumper or bodywarmer. You'll be cosy and comfortable when you're inside the ship, but it's always good to have warm clothes handy for when something out on deck takes your interest. Waterproof trousers, to wear over your pants or thermal underwear, are essential for Zodiac trips and land excursions. You'll need to bring a warm, windproof hat that covers your head and ears, and a collar scarf to protect your neck and chin from the elements. Polarised sunglasses will help reduce the glare from the snow and ice, protect your eyes from UV rays, and help you see the details of the Antarctic scenery better. It's also worth packing mitten, ski gloves and insulated glove liners to keep your hands warm and dry. Also, you might want to pack swimming and fitness gear if you plan to visit the spa, pool or fitness centre. Evenings are informal, but maybe pack a couple of casual shirts, and skirts or dresses for dinner, and something stylish for special occasions, such as cocktails with the Captain. When it comes to footwear, keep it light and easy to pack. Swan Hellenic will provide a pair of rubber Muck boots for Zodiac excursions and onshore landings, so a pair of lightweight trainers will be fine. Steer clear of bringing high-heels, especially stilettos, as the seas can get rough at times, and you'll need to keep your balance.

EXPEDITION EXTRAS:

When you travel to the polar regions, a Swan Hellenic expedition parka will be waiting for you in your stateroom on the first day of the cruise. This is yours to keep after your voyage. Your parka is water and windproof, and features an adjustable hood with fleece lining for added warmth, a visor for optimal visibility in all conditions, and a high collar and elongated cuffs to give you extra protection. You'll also receive a branded waterproof backpack, which will be useful for protecting your camera and any other electronic gear that you want to bring for shore landings.

Throughout this period, the weather transitions from the peak summer heat into a slightly milder autumn, humidity levels often remaining high, currently noted at 71%. While many days are sunny or cloudy, the region is also prone to variable precipitation.

Antarctica experiences its "summer" from December to March, with temperatures primarily hovering around the freezing point. On the Antarctic Peninsula, average highs range from 1°C to 4°C, while lows typically dip to between -2°C and -6°C. In March, the sun begins to set again and temperatures start a steady decline toward -5°C or lower, signalling the return of sea ice and the end of the travel season.

Montevideo

March in Montevideo, Uruguay, marks the beautiful transition from summer to autumn. Because it is in the Southern Hemisphere, March is late summer moving into early fall, offering some of the most pleasant, comfortable weather of the entire year. Daily highs range from 24°C - 25°C degrees and with overnight lows averaging 17°C, the overall month is generally warm, mildly humid and breezy.
