Tour Guide:

Often locals with intimate knowledge of an area, its culture, and history. Their role entails providing commentary, routing the tour, and seeing that people have a good time. They are a licensed, qualified expert who supplies specific information on the history, art, architecture and culture of the city/village/attraction where they are guiding the tour. The guide meets the group at the required place and leaves it at the end of the tour; they do not travel with the group.

Their role primarily includes assisting with accommodation, transportation between locations, and communication with tour guides at each stop. January - March: Cool to Warming Dry Season

Driven by the northeast monsoon, these months delivers Cambodia's driest and most settled weather. January and February feature clear skies, minimal humidity, and moderate daytime temperatures. January is generally the coolest month, with night and early morning temperatures dipping to around 21°C to 23°C. By late February and March, the dry heat builds rapidly, with afternoon temperatures in the central plains frequently reaching 34°C to 35°C. Precipitation is almost nonexistent during the first two months, averaging less than 30 mm per month. Dust levels increase across rural roads and water levels in rivers and lakes begin to recede.

April - June: Peak Heat and Early Southwest Monsoon

This period begins with extreme dry heat before transitioning into the humid monsoon season. April is historically the hottest month of the year across Cambodia, with afternoon highs frequently surpassing 38°C to 40°C in inland areas such as Siem Reap and Battambang. In May, the wind pattern reverses to the southwest monsoon, funnelling warm, humid air from the Gulf of Thailand and Indian Ocean. April experiences occasional short, convective thunderstorms ("mango showers"). By late May and June, regular afternoon downpours set in, helping to temper the extreme heat while elevating humidity levels.

July - September: Peak Southwest Monsoon

This period represents the height of Cambodia's wet season. The weather is dominated by persistent cloud cover, high relative humidity (frequently 85%–90%), and frequent rain. During this period, it rarely falls continuously all day; instead, it typically manifests as sharp, torrential downpours in the mid-to-late afternoon or evening, leaving clear intervals during the morning. September is typically the wettest month of the year across the country. Tonle Sap Lake swells to more than five times its dry-season size, reversing the flow of the Tonle Sap River. Rural waterways, flooded forests, and moats around temple complexes fill completely, and the landscape turns a vibrant green.

October - December: Monsoon Retreat and Cool Dry Transition

October marks the tail-end of the wet season. Heavy rains and high river levels during early October often lead to seasonal localized flooding in low-lying central plains and along the Mekong River basin. By early-to-mid November, the southwest winds subside and are replaced by the dry northeast continental airflow. Cloud cover decreases significantly, and humidity drops. December brings Cambodia's most temperate and pleasant weather of the year, characterised by warm, sunny days (around 30°C), cool, crisp nights, and very little rainfall.

Important:

- Please start arranging your visa three weeks before departure to account for any delays due to consulate operating hours.

- It is your responsibility to be travel-ready and ensure that you are aware and comply with any destination or travel requirements, including the validity of all required travel documents.
- Passengers who are not Australian citizens must also check with the respective consulate or visa agency to determine what their visa requirements are and what personal identification is required.
- It is also important to note that some areas of employment, such as journalism, government authorities and charity organisations, may have additional restrictions in applying for visas. This may, in turn, affect the type of application required.
